Hunger is not just a problem for the poor countries of the world. Even in the United States, there are plenty of people who don't get enough to eat. Some of these people are children. In 2014, there were nearly 16 million kids in the United States whose families sometimes didn't have enough food.

Hunger can have much more serious consequences than just a growling stomach. Children dealing with hunger pains have trouble paying attention in school. They don't have the energy to run around on the playground during recess. And not getting enough to eat for a long time can slow a kid's growth and brain development.

What can you do to help stop hunger? Giving time to programs that feed hungry children is a good place to start. Try volunteering at a soup kitchen in your community. Here's what one volunteer had to say about helping to feed hungry kids in his hometown: "It makes me really happy to see the kids eat. All kids have the right to eat."
